Strategies: Trauma Informed Care

“Research demonstrates that domestic violence victims often employ protective strategies to try to mitigate against the effects of children witnessing / growing up in violent homes”

(e.g., Haight, Shim, Linn, & Swinford, 2007; Levendosky, Lynch, & Graham-Bermann, 2000)
Instead of trying to discern “What is wrong with this person?”

A trauma-informed approach asks “What has happened to this person?”
Barriers to Effective Screening

- Trauma Symptoms as Adaptations
- Substance abuse
- Indiscriminant sexual behavior
- Self-harm and suicidal gestures
- Dissociation
- Continued contact with abuser
- Freeze response
- Avoidance or withdrawal
- Eating disorders
- Engaging in high-risk behaviors
Strategies: Trauma Informed Care

Children’s emotional recovery from exposure to DV depends more on the quality of their relationship with the non-battering parent than any other single factor. (Bancroft & Silverman, 2002)

Trauma Survivors Need:
• To feel safe
• Open and respectful communication
• Consistency and predictability
• To not be blamed (overtly or covertly)
• To have personal resilience acknowledged
Psychological trauma is a neuro-physiological state stemming from neurobiological injury.

The brain is not rigid as we once thought, but rather, is plastic/pliable, and has the ability to change its’ structure and function in response to experience.
Strategies: Trauma Informed Care

- Not their fault, and there is nothing they could have done to prevent it
- Avoid making negative statements about the batterer.
- Provide support, encouragement, and patience
- Pay attention to nonverbal communication
- Model appropriate behavior by talking about your feelings and labeling them
- Help them to identify coping skills
- Use language which focuses on the child, not your opinion of the child.
- Instead of saying “I’m proud of you” say “You’re doing great.”
